- He definitely did a great job on explaining the content that I did not understand.
- He did not teach us at ALL. It was more a self taught course based off of the mineral homework we had to do. We had one zoom call a week and in that zoom call he would put us into break out rooms to do a worksheet. He pop in to each break out room for maybe 5 minutes. He graded the worksheet we did just on if we did it or not. So I never got any feedback on how I did to help me. I was very confused the whole time is this class. I have never had such a bad grade in a class as I do in this one and I would say the professor is to blame for not being more hands on and helpful. I have done one on one zoom calls with him because I was so confused and I left to zoom call more confused then before.
- N/A
- The instructor did his best to explain content when we had questions, but he wasn't the one really teaching anything.
- This professor put us in groups and we had to teach ourselves. No lecture time or example preparation for the hard assignments we had to turn in.

- I loved the grading concept of this course because if you tried your best even though it may not be right you still received a good grade.
- I truly don't understand the point of a separated lecture class and a recitation class. The recitation class held no weight to be and only wasted 50 minutes of class time as we were separated into groups that didn't talk mainly because we didn't understand the material. Attending sessions didn't help learning the material so the work in the recitation class could be completed.
- Since the course was online it was kind of hard to do the group worksheets in a breakout room on zoom. It required a lot of graphing/drawing and collaboration. A lot of people would not participate once we were in breakout rooms. It was also hard to stay motivated to do all of the questions on the worksheet and thoroughly understand it when group members were not working together and you only earned one completion point for it. It felt like I was coming to class for participation points rather than to learn.
