- Professor Pandit was very organized and made the class easy to navigate. He communicated regularly and seemed like he wanted his students to do well, which is appreciated.
- The instructor had reasonable response times to emails and gentle reminders when exams were due. I know it is not something all professors do, but with everything going on I deeply appreciated it.

- I think Cengage videos helped explain the material. It may be nice for the professors of this class do do their own videos on some of the more difficult topics. Perhaps construct an excel spreadsheet that pertains to the tested examples. In addition, the timed tests should allow students more time. I often felt rushed and did not have the time to complete the problems. When you have material that is a bit complicated for most people and it involves calculations there should be more time allotted. In addition, it would have been nice if the final was opened on a weekend for those individuals who work. Most professors do this. It is rare to find a class that has a final on the very last day of class, during the workday week. In fact, this is the first class in my entire UNCG experience that has had this requirement or lack of flexibility on the final. Just a suggestion for future classes in ECO250. Professor Hitanshu Pandit was great and it appeared he was a partner with his students and wanted them all to succeed. He seems genuine and that reflected in his communications with students.
- I thought the course was well organized and the expectations were clear.
- The course was somewhat challenging yet effective
